I think that wireless carrier cards for laptops (CDMA and GPRS) would be quite useful and not distracting to other passengers. I think that people would be, with me included, very annoyed by other passengers talking on the phone all over the plane. While this is possible on quite a few flights now, because of the air phones on planes, the rates are so high that no one uses them. If you are going to lift the restrictions let's do it in a way that provides real usefulness, and doesn't just annoy everyone else on the plane.
